THE KISS IN COURT.

A LAWYER met a pretty Miss
While he was walking out one day,
And stole from her a honeyed kiss—
Which was not just the proper way.

At once a case of tort was brought
Which legal rules could not deny;
The lawyer held no justice ought
So frail a suit as that to try.

The action, when it got in court,
Met with a jury lenient,
And many a quillet and retort
Day after day on it was spent.

The lawyer claimed no maiden should
So much rare loveliness display;
A kiss like this he understood
Was flotsam on the state's highway.

The maiden said her rosy lips
No easement were for him to use,
Though they all others might eclipse—
His answer was somewhat abstruse.

And thus progressed the argument
Concerning kisser and kissee,
When to the jury it was sent,
Who failed entirely to agree.

But, sent into their room again,
They gave their voice to the defence;
And found the girl in fault, for plain
"Contributory negligence."

At Old Creighton Manor.

The Story of a Young Soldier's Narrow Escape.

BY MRS. VALERIE HAYS BERRY.

THE MASTER had named it Manor in loving remembrance, perhaps, of a manor house in Old England, where his happy boyhood days had been spent. And surely the English park was not finer than the noble woodland stretching away for miles on the left, nor were the English oaks statelier than the trees of native growth that lined the long avenue.

Generations had lived and flourished within those substantial walls, and the plantation had grown in prosperity till the dark war-cloud of the Revolution threw a shadow over it; for then the master of Creighton Manor bore a colonel's commission in the Continental Army, and in his stead a thoughtful-faced woman with many cares, but with a firm hand, governed the wide estate.

The winter when Washington, with his destitute and suffering army, encamped at Morristown, the gloom grew deeper over all. For that winter of '80-81 is memorable in the annals of Virginia as the one in which an officer who had once fought bravely in the patriot army led an invading force to burn and pillage without pity or discrimination. Nor did the noble lord who superseded him show more of ruth; and to this day the names of Arnold and Cornwallis are not beloved in the Old Dominion.

Before the British came an incursion was feared, and long, sad days of suspense and dreary expectancy followed each other gloomily. But even in shadowed lives bright days will sometimes come, and one of the brighest Creighton Manor had known in mouths dawned when Arundel Creighton, the colonel's eldest son, rode up the long avenue on his big gray horse, to be folded in his mother's welcoming arms.

Mrs. Creighton could maintain her dignity, even in so happy a moment, but the troop of young people who rushed from every direction threw ceremony to the winds, and clung to the young soldier's hands, his neck, his arms, in ecstatic welcome.

"Clare has grown more than any of you," he observed, his glance singling out a slim, bright-eyed maiden, who by dint of commands and promises, was marshaling her excited juniors into something like order; while Arundel, having given his mother the letter that his father had sent, drew slightly away that she might read it without interruption.

"I had to—to keep up with you," was the merry retort. "But, pray, Arundel, keep my troop in order while I go to the kitchen, for I carry the keys to-day, and dinner must not come late."

"You have come in time for my birthday, Arundel," said Clare, smiling across the dinner-table at her cousin. "It falls to-morrow, and we are to have neither work nor lessons; and in the evening we will play games in the oak parlor."

"And, Arundel, you will help us play them!" chimed in the eager voices of the young people of the family, gathered at the table.

Arundel promised, nothing loth. The rigor of discipline and the severity of camp life were put out of his mind in this happy home reunion.

Nevertheless, the day had its duties as well as its pleasures. Mrs. Creighton wrote a long letter to her husband, and gravely consulted with her son as to the best adjustment of some important business matters

Clare's birthday dawned brightly, but before noon a rumor, vague and uncertain, came to their ears that British troops were advancing into the interior. Mrs. Creighton did not yield full credence to the report, but she hastened her preparations for parting with her son—those loving touches to a soldier's outfit so essential to health and comfort.

Clare refused to listen to disquieting suggestions, and, aided by willing workers, went on with her preparations for an evening of delight in the oak parlor.

But by mid-afternoon came a messenger on horseback—a friend, tried and true, who, after a few hurried words with Mrs. Creighton, rode quickly away.

"Now, indeed, you must leave us, my son," said the mother with solemn tenderness. "For the British are moving and it is not known what direction they will take."

The good gray horse was led from his stall, and, looking every inch a soldier, young and slender as he was, Arundel mounted, after an affectionate farewell to each of the sorrowing group that surrounded him.

But when he had shaken hands in good-bye to Clare, he had contrived to whisper a word or two that made that damsel's eyes brighten suddenly; and her aunt noticed that she bore the disappointment of Arundel's hurried departure better than was natural. With light and willing footsteps she aided her aunt in carrying certain heirlooms and papers of value to safe places of concealment.

"For if the servants do not know where they are hidden," said that wise matron, "neither threats nor promises can make them tell."

But when dusk fell and the quiet evening meal had been eaten there was no appearance of a foe. Clare gathered her cousins in the oak parlor and they began their games. They grew merrier as they proceeded, but in the midst of the bustle and laughter Clare's alert senses detected a light tapping on the window.

She drew near it with apparent carelessness, and in the moonlight saw a shawled and turbaned figure pressed close to the wall.

"Open the door into the corridor," met her ears in a shrill whisper, and the figure vanished.

A corridor led from the oak parlor to the dining-room, and from the corridor a narrow door, always kept locked on the inside, opened into the yard. Clare slipped into the corridor, turned the key in the lock behind her and ran to this narrow door. There was a light tap on the panel and she drew the bolt with eager fingers. The same shawled and turbaned figure stood in the doorway, and with low courtesies demanded in a thin, cracked, but cajoling voice:

"Will the pretty missy have her fortune told?"

"Oh, Arundel! How could you?" whispered Clare, smothering her laughter. "What will Aunt Mildred say?"

"She must not know," he replied, in the same low tone, as the disguised youth stepped softly inside the door and drew the bolt. "I wanted to help with your games, and I think the British are not near; so when I came to Burton Wood, I left the king's highway and took a bridle-path, which, I knew, would bring me back here. It led me into the woods behind the wheat-fields, and there I left my horse and came across by Persimmon Row—borrowed Bathsheba's holiday rig, without her leave, and here I am! I will stay an hour, tell all your fortunes, and leave as I came; not a servant on the place knows I am here."

Clare gave subdued but laughing acquiescence, yet had the two cousins known what that hour held for them, Arundel Creighton would have retraced his steps with all speed, and no tarrying for farewells.

Clare, whose absence was beginning to excite wonder, ushered the visitor into the oak parlor, announcing that Cicely Ann, from Mr. Osborne's plantation, would tell the fortunes of all in the room.

While the young people eyed the soothsayer curiously, she whisked the candles behind a tall screen, and placed a chair so that the firelight fell flickeringly upon the fortune-teller's swarthy features—judiciously darkened with burnt cork and shaded as they were by the voluminous headkerchief.

Clare produced an English shilling, and declaring that it must answer for all, held out her palm for inspection. That she should become maid-of-honor to Queen Charlotte, and wed a peer of the realm, was only a part of the prediction that excited the merriment of her young cousins; and as each came forward in turn, the mirth increased as the promises became more extravagant.

The interruption to this innocent merry-making was sharp and sudden. The loud barking of the house-dogs was followed by the tramp of many feet. In deadly terror Clare rushed to the window, where a score of men were filing past, their scarlet coats and their bright muskets gleaming in the moonlight. She glided lightly to the door in the corridor and softly drew the bolts. Holding it slightly ajar, she saw that the yard was full of soldiers, and horses were trampling the shrubberies.

With despair in her heart, she turned back to the oak parlor, just as the hall doors were burst violently in; and then followed a scene of pillage and wanton destruction of household goods that made the name of Benedict Arnold long remembered by those who witnessed it.

Mrs. Creighton, her first thought for her children, had started towards the oak parlor. In the long hall she stood and spoke with dignity and self-possession to one whose uniform bespoke him an officer.

"This house has never yet refused its hospitality to a soldier of the King, and had I expected so distinguished a guest as Colonel Arnold, his supper would have been ready for him."

She stood not far from the oak parlor; just outside of it, her son leaned against the wainscoting of the hall, his eyes bent down, regret, bitter as it was unavailing, tugging at his heart-strings. He thought of his father's grief when he should hear of his capture, and his bitter mortification when he should learn how that capture was made.

In those minutes of shame and self-reproach, Arundel Creighton learned a lesson that lasted him through life—that no amusement, however innocent in itself, should interfere with the performance of imperative duty.

Nor were Clare's thoughts much more to be desired. When Arundel whispered that he might return in the evening, she had allowed the thought of her own pleasure to stifle the remonstrance of conscience. She should have sharply negatived such a suggestion, and she knew it. With an awful sinking of the heart she asked herself—How could her aunt forgive her when Arundel was led away a prisoner?

She stole another glance at her cousin, vaguely wondering why he had not been arrested. He stood quietly in his place with downcast eyes, and her cheeks burned with shame and distress, that he, so true a soldier, should have been surprised by the enemy in a garb so ill befitting that character.

A question flashed through her mind—Was it possible that the troops had not penetrated his disguise? His mother evidently had not. A possibility, daring, desperate even—but the crisis was a terrible one—darted through her mind. She went directly to her cousin, and extending the key to the door in the corridor said in a tone of authority:

"Cicely Ann, take this key to Bathsheba and tell her to prepare supper for our guest."

Arundel lifted his eyes and met the look of agonized entreaty in Clare's. With a half-audible "Yes, mist'ess!" he took the key and passing out of the hall door bent his steps to Bethsheba's cabin.

The desire to run at his utmost speed was hard to resist, but he compelled himself to walk sedately across the moonlit yard, and he did so unmolested by the soldiers, who passed and repassed him.

When he reached the cabin he stole softly round it where the shadows lay long towards the persimmon trees which, marking an old fence row across a wide field, had acquired the name of Persimmon Row.

Had the maurading soldiers been less intent upon pillage, they might have seen now and then, a shadow move across a patch of light between these trees, and finally melt into the woods where the good gray horse stood waiting.

Bathsheba's indignation when she found her gay shawl and her turban on a persimmon bough, waving jeeringly above the blue cotton gown on the leaves below, knew no bounds; and she never failed to repeat the circumstance in connection with the Britishers' visit to Creighton Manor.

Not until Arundel returned home in safety was the lost key to the door of the corridor found, though long ere that Clare had confessed and been fully forgiven. And generations of Creighton's treasured in their possession a souvenir of the Revolution in the shape of an old English shilling

TOWNSHIP HIGH SCHOOLS.

The present generation of youth apparently requires a different system of education from that which raised up the intellectual giants who are the leaders among men in the past. We are surrounded with so many comforts and go through life with such little effort compared with the hardships and trials which beset our parents' paths that we have come to think that all attainments must be made easy. And as a first step in this process we are trying to coat education with sugar, and, if the youth will not then reach out for the pill, to force it down his throat.

At first thought we are apt to assume that this system of bringing school training to our very doors, where in former times the people were content in many cases to educate themselves, should result in the production of superior intellects. But you cannot coax from the seed what is not in the seed, and, on the other hand, unless the obstacles to be overcome are too momentous, the germ of the seed will develop without extraordinary assistance exactly what power is there stored up. Our superior public schools and higher institutions of learning are turning out a greater number of well-educated and trained men and women, but they are not producing greater intellects than the world has ever seen.

This, however, is a result which is proving of great good to the country, and is in itself a good excuse for the extension of the public school system so as to include country high schools, a change which is now being much agitated. Deputy Secretary Hamilton, with an eye ever alert for the interests of his own Agricultural Department, makes another plea for the township high school, which he thinks contains the best reason for its establishment. He points out the tendency of population to migrate from the country to the city, and assigns as the cause for this the lack of educational advantages in the country districts. He sees the time, unless the country low grade school is supplemented by the high school, when the agricultural districts will be denuded of population to an extent that will be dangerous to the Commonwealth.

Undoubtedly one of the greatest dangers of the times is the centralization of population, but there are causes other than the lack of educational advantages that conspire to this end. More comfortable homes with conveniences not attainable in the country, easier and cheaper means of moving from one place to another, places of amusement, better access to churches, but above all increased business opportunities, are luring the youth from the country to the big cities.

However, these advantages cannot be moved to the country, and Professor Hamilton thinks the high school can. If the township high school will assist, even in a small degree, in keeping the farmer boy to the plow, it is worth while giving the new departure in our school system a trial.—Phila. Times

LIVELY AT TIMES.

An Imaginative Drummer Visits Philadelphia and Has a d. t. Dream.

"Talk about Philadelphia being a slow place!" said the Chicago stove drummer; "It's all a mistake. The only time I was ever unable to hold my own in a crowd was in the Quaker City. I was sitting in the rotunda of a hotel there about 9 o'clock in the evening when a bell began to ring loudly somewhere near, and I jumped up and went out on the sidewalk to see if I could discover any signs of the fire. When I got outside I saw everybody rushing along like ma', and about fifty men came tearing into the hotel at such a rate that they knocked me down on the sidewalk and came near trampling the life out of me.

"I managed to crawl to my feet and hurried inside, wondering if I would have time to get my trunk out. Everything seemed to be quiet when I got in, and I asked a man who was smoking a cigar if the fire was out.

"'What fire?' said he.

"'Wasn't the bell ringing for fire?' I asked.

"'Oh, no,' said he. 'That was our curfew bell.'"—Detroit Free Press.

STAVED OFF IMPENDING EVIL.

Mrs. Bimley met her husband in the hall and gave him a good hug and kiss.

"Oh, George," said she, "I'm so glad you've come. Your slippers are by the fire, and I have a nice hot supper for you, and some of that marmalade you like so well. When you are away I'm so lonely I don't know what to do, and I thought I would ask you if—"

"Here," said Bimley, hurriedly drawing from his pocket a twenty dollar bill, "this is for a spring bonnet, and I'll have that set of diamond earrings sent up first thing in the morning. Don't say a word; you are perfectly welcome."

Later on Bimley wiped the perspiration from his brow and muttered to himself:

"Got that visit from her mother headed off once more, but it comes high.—Detroit Free Press.

DINGLEY'S TARIFF.

HOW IT WOULD AFFECT THE PRICE OF CLOTHING—A LITTLE SATIRE BY THE BALTIMORE "SUN."

The wearing of clothes has always been considered a distinguishing badge of civilization. The English philosopher, Carlyle, differentiates man from all other orders of creation, and particularly the brute creation, by describing him as a "clothes-wearing animal." The higher nations rise in the scale of civilization the more attention is generally paid to the quality, comfort, elegance and convenience of the bodily raiment of both sexes. Acting upon this knowledge, apparently, the Hon. Nelson Dingley, Jr., of Maine, and the Republican majority of the committee of ways and means propose to make the American man and woman pay dearly in future for the privilege—or shall we say the luxury?—of wearing clothes. It was Mr. Harrison himself who four years ago, in the national campaign, originated, or, if he did not originate, made use of the aphorism—that "cheap coats make cheap men." The Dingley tariff, if it should become a law, will effectually remove this disgrace from the American people. There will be no more cheap coats—nor for the matter of that, cheap trousers, or waistcoats, or hats, or flannels, or anything else that is made of wool, in whole or in part, including blankets, the necessary garment by day of the uncivilized Indian, as it is the usual covering by night of his more civilized brethren.

That the necessary effect of the new schedules for wools and woolen goods proposed by the Dingley bill will be to put up the prices of every description of woolen goods, whether of domestic or foreign manufacture, will not be denied by the author of the bill. Wool, the raw material of manufacture, is taken from the free list at the bidding of the Ohio wool-growers and of the sheep-raising States of the West, where the free-silver sentiment most strongly prevails. The duties to be imposed on imported wools are understood to be sop to the free-silver Cerberus. Meanwhile, as Mr. Dingley himself explains, the injury which will be thus inflicted upon the woolen manufacturing interest in this country requires that by way of compensation there should be a corresponding increase made in the rate of duties upon all sorts of woolen manufactured abroad.

To such an extent is this solicitude for the wool-growing interest shown that even "degras," or "brown wool-grease," as it is called, made from the washings of wool and used by leather manufacturers, is taken from the free list and made dutiable again, thereby compelling the American leather industry to pay tribute to the cod and menhaden fish-oil industry of Maine, whose product, they must, perforce, use as a substitute for wool grease. Carpet wools, which are not raised in this country and must be imported, are taken from the free list and taxed heavily, upon the plea that some of them contain a percentage of wool which could be used in the manufacture of cheap clothing, and cheap clothing, whether for the rich or the poor, is what the Republican tariff-makers hope to make impossible. * * *

The text of the new bill, which provides for the exemption of the "wearing apparel, articles of personal adornment, toilet articles and similar personal effects of persons arriving in the United States," besides the qualifications and restrictions found in former laws, adds this further proviso, "that (6) the articles exempted shall not exceed $100 in value, nor (7) shall the exemption apply to residents of other countries entering the United States more than once in each year." A further provision extends the exemption to the old clothes of the returning tourist which he took abroad with him, provided (8) they "have not been advanced in value or improved in condition by any process of labor or manufacture" in a foreign country—that is, of course, have not been repaired or cleaned, pressed or brushed by any foreign valet or maid, had any buttons sewed on, &c., &c. And all these facts, essential to securing the benefit of "the exemption," must be established by the oath of the passenger.

Are we not right in saying that the Dingley tariff is framed in a spirit of distinct hostility to the civilized practice of wearing clothes? To the poor man it says, you must be content with one coat for yourself and one dress for your wife, when, heretofore, you have thought that, without extravagance, you might have two. To the rich man it says, you must forego the satisfaction of buying at lower prices, if not better clothes, clothing more to your individual taste abroad than you could buy at home.

To the American woman the Dingley tariff is especially unfair. A man might buy a suit of clothes, may be two suits, in London, and some other articles besides, for $100. But how many "dainty creations" of Worth or Madame Vivot can an American woman buy for such a sum in Paris? Such a limitation upon her taste, her ingenuity, her talent for spending is nothing short of an insult to her intelligence. Then, as to the effect of the denial of the benefit of the exemption to those foreigners who visit the United States more than once a year—"habitual criminals" in that respect. The Montreal merchant who makes frequent visits to New York would find that the duties upon the clothes on his back amounted to more in a year or six months than their cost, and that, if the police regulations would permit, the only way to escape "ruinous taxation" would be to come without any clothes at all. Truly, as a product of Republican statesmanship, the Dingley bill is a monument to the civilization of this country and the age.

THE LADY'S AGE.

The Prince of Wales, about five years ago, met a charming lady, well-known in London society, at Hamburg. "You are young enough," he said, in the course of conversation, "for me to be able to ask your age."

"Twenty-five," was the ready reply.

This summer his Royal Highness met the lady again. "What," he asked with a humorous smile, "is your age, I wonder?"

"Twenty-five," again said the lady.

"But you said that the last time I met you," remarked the Prince, with a smile.

"Well, sir," laughed the lady, "and would you have me to contradict myself?"—Lady's Pictorial.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.

The April number of Harper's Magazine will be particularly attractive for the interest of the text and for the excellence of the illustrations. It will open with a popular article on "Washington and the French craze of 93," with illustrations in Howard Pyle's best manner, including a frontispiece in color. "The Martain will develop strongly in interest, and will be accompanied by some of Du Maurier's most characteristic drawings. Poultney Bigelow, in the sixth of his articles on White Man's Africa," will describe the Cape Colony Parliament, and will consider the effects of the Jameson raid on the relations of the Dutch and English. There will also be a variety of articles on topics of present interest, and several short stories, including "The Wisdom of Fools," by Margaret Deland, a study of personal responsibility in modern life.

The President's Enormous Mail.

He Receives as Many as Eight Hundred Letters per Day.

"As many as eight hundred letters in one day are received at the White House, but comparatively few of these, only the most important ones, reach the President, for if he dealt personally with all his correspondents he could do nothing else," writes ex-President Harrison, telling in the March Ladies' Home Journal, of "A Day With the President at His Desk," the first of his series of articles on life in the White House. "Very many of the letters addressed to the President," he adds, "are trivial, not a few of them impertinent, and some of them angry and threatening. These, if the Private Secretary is a judicious man, the President never hears of, and the malicious intent of the writer is thwarted. The requests for autographs are scarcely numerable. Patches for bed-quilts and lunch-cloths add to the burden. Begging letters, for numbers, take second place in the President's mail. They come from every part of the land, and relate to every possible subject. Some are appeals to aid the writer to get an education, or to pay off a mortgage, or to buy a piano or a pony; and no form of public appeal is absent—to aid the building of churches, to endow schools, to build monuments, and to aid every other good purpose for which men, women or children associate themselves. On one day the requests for specific sums aggregated nine thousand dollars. These appeals are unavailing in the nature of things and self-respect ought to restrain the practice."

RESPECT THE STOMACH.

Few people have proper respect for the stomach. If a thing "tastes good" and is not too hot or so cold as to be painful to the mouth or throat, it is swallowed by too many people regardless of the consequences.

Do not give the stomach food that will irritate it or retard it in the performance of its natural functions, or it will retaliate in a way that is decidedly unpleasant. A headache, a "dump," or "heavy feeling" in the stomach, and irritations of the skin, are mostly symptoms of disordered digestion resulting from unwholesome food.

The danger to health from this cause is so imminent that it behooves every one to adopt precautionary measures to keep their baking powders, which are now so numerous, from the kitchen stores. It will be found that those powders sold at a lower price than Royal are almost invariably made from alum, and therefore of inferior quality and dangerous to health.

The safer way is to look for the well-known red and yellow label of the Royal Baking Powder. That is certain to cover a powder free from alum. The Royal is made of cream of tartar, a pure wholesome fruit acid derived from grapes. It is renowned for adding anti-dyspeptic qualities to the food, as well as for making finer and better food.

"Two Months to Live."

The following letter, regarding the "Vitalia Remedies," speaks loudly of these wonderful remedies:

March 16, 1896

"MY DEAR FRIEND:—Had it not been for your remedies, I have no doubt I would have been dead long ago. Therefore, I think it is my duty as well as a real pleasure to tell all who care to know just what they did for me.

I was taken sick in August, 1891, and called in a nearby Doctor, who first pronounced my trouble an attack of dysentery, and later an abscess of the bowels; in the meantime the way I was running down hill and daily losing strength had driven me to my bed. Finding that I was rapidly growing worse the Doctor finally concluded that he did not know just what was the matter with me, but that he wanted me to be examined by a specialist. This was done by a prominent bowel specialist of our city (Baltimore), who pronounced my case cancer of the rectum, and gave me less than two months to live. Just at this juncture in my life an acquaintance wrote me of Vitalia and some of its wonderful cures, and I lost no time in placing myself under its marvelous influence. This was in March, 1892; and almost from the first I began to experience a decided improvement in my general feelings. This was soon reinforced by a continual lessening of the pain which before had been unbearable, well nigh maddening at times and without cessation. The bowels began to assume their normal condition, and life began to have a charm so long vanished. When I became sufficiently convalescent to be out again I found I then weighed fifty pounds below my regular average; how far I got while at my worst I do not know. I soon went back to my former weight, and there I have remained quite constantly ever since.

Long ago all cancerous troubles vanished, and I am now an active, life-enjoying business man, thanks to Vitalia and its great ability to overcome my death-dealing malady. I wish every one afflicted with cancer could see what it has done for me. With very kindest regards and best wishes, always your sincere friend."

HOW MUCH HAS BEEN SAVED?

Our contemporary, the Star and Sentinel explains that in all businesses some accounts are necessarily carried from one year to another, because they can not be liquidated In this explanation it has reference to the postponement of certain items, heretofore specified, from the County account of 1895 to that of 1896, thereby showing a large balance in the former year It cites, as an illustration, a bridge contract, which can not be fulfilled by the Commissioners that is paid for until it is favorably passed by the inspectors

This manner of arguing is shameful The largest item which was carried over from 1895 was a sum due the Alms house payable on demand of the Directors of the Poor, and due in December The same amount was paid in December of 1894 and should have been paid in 1895, but was, instead, carried to 96 showing a balance in '95 which did not represent the business of that year This appearing on the face of it to be suspicious, the Star's attention was called to it, and now the Star makes answer in the same deceptive way as was arranged the account of 1895

If the money was not on hand to pay these accounts when due, it was the fault of the Republican management, if they were deliberately postponed to show a larger balance than an honest statement of the year's business would exhibit, it was treachery on the part of that management to the people of the County And it is to be regretted that they now attempt to further deceive by a delusive argument, for there is no similarity whatever between a payment to the Alms house and a contract for a bridge

Our contemporary explains also that when it said last fall that the account of 95 would show a saving corresponding to $1 500 the condition of the county treasury justified the inference It is odd that in two months November and December, sufficient money was used up to change a balance of four thousand dollars, not only that the public debt was actually increased It is true, then, that in October the accounts indicated a large saving and two months afterward actually showed a deficit the manner of book keeping must have been so remarkable as to lead one to believe that the same system of financiering was in vogue as in 1895 and it is justifiable to suppose that all the figures presented to influence the voters were arranged for that purpose But our contemporary did not say just before the last election, that it inferred that 96 would be an economical year it made the statement positively

Last week the Star stated "that the county debt was decreased eight thousand dollars during the three years' incumbency of the Republican Board of Commissioners" This would leave the casual reader under the impression that the Republican Board had saved eight thousand dollars We would examine into these accounts for a moment

The statement of the County's net indebtedness, as it is now published, appeared for the first time in the account of 1892 and was arranged by the Republican management If it was conceived with the same intentions as was the account of 1895 its correctness can be justly questioned. But, in 1892 the bonded indebtedness was $14 817 21, in 1896 it was $16 817 21—an increase of $2 000.00 The temporary loans in 1892 outstanding were $12 500 00 in 1896 $6 000 00 These two items bonded debt and temporary loans, form the liabilities, which are $4 500 less, not eight thousand less in 1896 than in 1892 Now this sum $4 500 is the actual difference in liabilities, but the Star adds to it the three thousand odd dollars more now out standing in taxes than in 1892 and there by gets its eight thousand

Outstanding taxes, possibly collectible possibly not, are rated as assets but any statement which would lead the people to suppose that the sum which these taxes represent is a sum saved is very misleading and untenable So that if any person has believed that the Republican Board has saved this amount he has been deceived The facts would indicate rather that the Board had been remiss in its duties in leaving the outstanding taxes so largely increase in amount, and yet the larger the amount of these taxes becomes the less appears the net indebtedness, according to this statement and therein put the Star gets its eight thousand dollars

The extraordinary expenses to which the Commissioners were put during a term of about six years prior to 1892 have been explained in these columns and the Star, in the same line, said last week "As in a private business some years show a greater expense account than others so in the county's management one year may differ from another in that respect" The difference then, between the liabilities of the county in the last several years is due to differing conditions, one year requiring larger expenditures than another It is plain that during the last several years financial circumstances have been normal, and during that time the public debt should have been naturally and materially reduced, but during the last year it has been increased

Considering then, all the circumstances it does not appear that the Republican Board has exhibited any unusual business ability, except in the way of figures, while it does appear that some of the Republican arguments have been unequivocally false, and all are to be questioned

PRESUMABLY to answer a question—why the Directors of the Poor with a large farm at hand, should buy large quantities of potatoes, onions, sweet corn, cabbage and other vegetables, the Star inquires whence came the stuff wherewith to make hilarious former occasions at the Alms house We don't quite see the connection, but we would remind the Republican management that it were bad principle to fall back on the supposed misdoings of some one else to explain one's own bad management, especially when one is under a promise to do things with economy It's not good farming to buy articles one can and ought to produce

THE famous anti Quay "Seventy six" met in the headquarters of the Business Men's League, Harrisburg, last Wednesday and adopted resolutions endorsing Hon John Wanamaker for the office of State Treasurer They say that inasmuch as public criticism of the management of the office of State Treasurer and the general impression that the financial credit of the Commonwealth has been perverted to partisan ends, Mr. Wanamaker is the man to nominate, and insinuate that Mr Quay is not

But on the other hand it is stated that if ex-Postmaster General John Wanamaker shall become a candidate for State Treasurer, United States Senator Quay will be the aspirant against him for that nomination before the Republican State convention on the 1 of August

It looks very much then as if the fight will be to the finish

THE LEGISLATURE.

The following is among the business transacted during the week

The Seyfert bill providing for the prevention and punishment of prize fighting was favorably reported from committee

The bill defining libel and providing punishment therefor was considered, and on consideration of its first section in which an effort to amend failed, was voted down by 83 to 5

Mr Bliss introduced a bill regulating the sale of certain malt liquors, requiring licenses to be taken out by venders thereof and prescribing the amount of license fees to be paid out It compels those who manufacture beer ale or porter outside of the State to pay a tax of 1 cent per gallon to the State Treasurer for every gallon sold within the State the dealer to receive his license to conduct the sale from the Auditor General also, to authorize the issue and service of warrants of arrest on Sunday when complaint is made of certain violations of the liquor laws or of maintaining a disorderly house

A bill was introduced fixing the term for which licenses shall hereafter be issued under the various acts regulating and restraining the sale of liquors within this Commonwealth at three years and providing for the payment annually of the annual license fee required by law In case of failure to pay the license is to be revoked

These bills passed second reading To protect the American flag from insult and degradation to promote the safety of pedestrians by compelling the equipment of street surface railroad cars with automatic fenders

The two reform bills on the third reading calendar on motion of Mr Gobin went over in their order

Mr Gibson's fire proof Capitol bill also went over

Mr Grady made an effort by resolution to have the Anti Cigarette bill placed on the calendar but the effort was without result The bill had been negatived by the Committee on Health and Sanitation

Mr Flinn said the bill was an important one and should have a place on the calendar It had passed one branch or the other ever since he had been a member of the Senate but for some reason had failed to become law He had always favored its passage and was for its passage now The vote to place on the calendar was lost by a vote of 11 to 14 and the Lieutenant Governor decided it lost

By Mr Teh of Northampton amending the act of April 15 1834 relating to county officers to provide that County Treasurers shall receive in full compensation for their services a minimum fee of seven eighths of one per cent on all moneys received and paid by him and that the fees in excess of $5 000 a year shall remain in the County Treasury

These bills passed finally Making constable ex officio the wardens for the extinction of forest fires to enlarge the competency of the wife to testify against her husband directing County Commissioners to pay unpaid costs to constable

The bill embodying the Governor's recommendations for a new Capitol to cost not more than $500 000 which was introduced in the State Senate by Senator Wilton has been reported from the committee on public buildings and grounds with an affirmative recommendation

The Nesbit resolution calling for a legislative commission to investigate charges of fraud in fitting up Grace Church was reported from the buildings and grounds commission and adopted

The legislative authorities predict the enactment of two bills at least on direct inheritance and beer which it is estimated would produce an annual revenue of not less than $1 000 000 each with the possibility of the passage of one or two other bills that would swell the flow into the Treasury Chairman Folks and Mr Bliss like other prominent backers of these bills, in figuring on the revenue keep in view the desirability of specifying in the bill for a central Capitol building at not less than $1 000 000 They propose to raise the direct inheritance tax permanent and the beer tax an emergency measure for a period of from three to five years

By a vote of to 78 the House killed a bill increasing the minimum school term in the State from 6 to 7 months This measure has been up at every session for ten years and has always been knocked out Twelve years ago the term was increased from 5 to 6 months and no legislation on this point has since been enacted

WELL WORTH HEARING.

The Evening Independent of Massillon, Ohio., says of the little elocutionist:

"Mary Kolbe, of Columbus, O., sweet, gifted child of ten years, favorite of Governor McKinley—a pleased audience of cultivated and refined people, more numerous than the space allowed sitting for—these were the conditions in the chapel of the Presbyterian church last evening. Tears and smiles, and laughter and sterner emotions than pathos, wit and humor—her genius commanded of her patrons. A queen of the platform or of the stage, mature in years and in her vocation, might be gratified to portray with such art, and yet so naturally and successfully as she did, the German in costume, behavior and dialect; the street waif; the lady in the opera box; the newsboy; the widowed mother searching the fresh battlefield for her slain son. With equal merit she presented the other characters and numbers of her programme."

The entertainment will be given next Thursday evening in Brua Chapel at 8 o'clock. Admission 25 and 35 cents. Board open for reserved seats at Buehler's Drug Store Wednesday at 9 o'clock.

The Farmer and the Road Law.

York Springs, March 25th, 1897.

On Friday, March 19th, inst., there was a meeting in Odd Fellow's Hall, in York Springs, composed principally of the farmers of Huntington and Latimore townships and citizens of the borough, called together to examine and discuss the new road law now before the Legislature.

The object of the meeting was stated by Jere. Shelly, after which the meeting was organized by electing Lafayette Lerew, chairman, and Abraham Grove, secretary.

A number of addresses were made, all in opposition to any change in the laws now in force. The following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted and arrangements made to circulate the same for signatures of persons concurring in the views expressed:

Whereas, A bill is now pending in the Legislature of the State proposing to make radical changes in the road laws, and

Whereas, The main features of said law are calculated to enforce oppressive and unnecessary taxation in localities where the present system of roads are entirely satisfactory to the people of such localities, and

Whereas, Certain classes of citizens are urging a change in the law who contribute but a slight proportion of the taxes necessary to make the improvements contemplated

Therefore, Resolved, 1st, That we deem the existing laws on the subject as perfect as the present condition of the county will admit,

Resolved, 2nd, That we request our Representatives to oppose all changes in the present road law,

Resolved, 3rd, That we further request that our Representatives do not consent to any legislation that will admit of the bonding of the county or township for such purposes.

The meeting instructed the secretary to make copies of the above for circulation among the people and when collected to forward the same to our Representatives at Harrisburg.

The meeting adjourned to meet on Saturday evening, April 10th, at 7 o'clock, p. m., when able speakers will be present. Everybody come. Sec.

Dr. James Morrow, representing the American Bible Society addressed the Conference. Ellis Bell, of Altoona, conducted the devotional exercises. Mrs. T. L. Tompkinson, of Berwick, and Mrs. M. R. POTATO GROWING.

SOME INTERESTING EXPERIMENTS MADE—THE EFFECT OF FERTILIZERS—IMPORTANCE OF PRESERVING THE FERTILITY OF THE LAND FROM WHICH THIS CROP IS TAKEN—THE QUESTION OF PROFIT.

The low price of potatoes the past two seasons shows that there is a liability of the supply being greater than the demand during any year, and that there is no staple crop grown that can be made a specialty with the expectation of deriving therefrom extra high prices compared with other crops. Potatoes are largely used on the farms, however, and but a portion of the crop is marketed. If the use of improved machinery lessens the labor required for the crop the prices will be lowered accordingly, and it is only when drought, disease or injury from insects reduce the yields that prices approach $1 per bushel. Potatoes have sold in some sections at 5 cents per bushel during the past two years. An important point in growing potatoes, even when prices are low, is to secure a crop without depriving the land of fertility. As long as the soil loses no plant food, and the cost of labor is not greater than the value of the crop in market, the farmer can grow potatoes to be used for stock, they serve admirably as an adjunct to grain and hay in the winter season, and provide an excellent rotation among the crops in assisting to clear the land of weeds, due to the thorough cultivation necessary in order to meet with success in growing them.

APPLICATION OF FERTILIZERS.

In the use of large amounts of fertilizers a point can be reached at which the farmer must wait for the second year before he can realize on his investment in fertilizer. At the Geneva experiment station the application of 1000 pounds of fertilizer increased the proportion of marketable potatoes 48½ bushels over the yield upon land having no fertilizer, and enough fertilizer was retained in the soil to give an increase of about 39½ bushels the next year, the total for the two years being 88 bushels gain over the normal. On land upon which 2000 pounds of fertilizer per acre has been applied the yield was about 4½ bushels more than when 1000 pounds were used and a gain the next year of a fraction over 14 bushels, the total for the two years being 18½ bushels more than the increase from 1000 pounds. The use of 2000 pounds shows that if too much fertilizer is used the farmer must wait two or more years in order to derive full benefit therefrom, which is equivalent to so much capital invested for the future, but upon which he cannot immediately realize. The crop can only appropriate a sufficiency, and, while it is advisable to use a full supply of fertilizer, it is not best to use an excess, which is liable to remain unused in the soil.

COST OF THE FERTILIZERS.

The average cost of the 1000 pounds of fertilizer was $16 37 and of the 2000 pounds $32 74. One thousand pounds of fertilizer contained 36 4 pounds of nitrogen, 76 9 pounds of available phosphoric acid and 90 6 pounds of potash. Estimating the value of the crop at 50 cents per bushel, the net gain from 1000 pounds of fertilizer was $27 58 for the two years, but the net gain from the 2000 pounds was $7 12 less than from 1000 pounds, due to greater expenditure for the larger quantity. The yield of potatoes on land that received no fertilizer was 126 bushels (fractions omitted) of marketable tubers and 24 bushels of culls. From the 1000 pounds of fertilizer the yield was 174 bushels and 18 bushels of culls. On the land that received 2000 pounds the yield was 179 bushels and 15 bushels of culls. The next year only 83 bushels of marketable potatoes and 28 bushels of culls were taken from the land that received no fertilizer, while from the land upon which 1000 pounds of fertilizers had been applied the year before the crop was 125 bushels and 23 bushels of culls, with 160 bushels from the land receiving 2000 pounds and 21 bushels of culls. One point to notice is the great falling off of the crop the second year on the land that received no fertilizer at all. This loss will have to be supplied or the land will not in the future prove profitable, but, on the other hand, the fertilizer not only increased the yields, but left the land in good condition and improved the quality of the tubers. The profits depend on the prices for potatoes. In estimating the crop at 50 cents per bushel allowance must be made for location. It is safer to use fertilizer, however, in order to prevent loss of fertility in the soil.—Phila. Record.

The Onion and Its Virtues.

The onion is rich in medicinal virtues. Because of its strong odor, some will not tolerate it in the house, much less eat it in any form. If people would but eat the onion, say once a week, there would be less dyspepia, and more congenial good nature. Raw onion is the best of all blood purifiers. It is the best cure for scurvy, or low condition of the blood. For colds or all bronchial ailments, the onion is simply magical in its curative powers. Settled colds that have stubbornly resisted all manner of cough mixtures, will promptly yield to onion syrup.

Onion syrup is made by scooping out the center of a large onion, filling this hole with sugar, and baking. Instead of baking, the onion may be peeled, finely sliced, and boiled in a tightly-covered pie tin until soft, adding sugar and a very little water. Strain through a sieve. In this way, a large onion will give about two teaspoonfuls of strong syrup. This syrup is not unpleasant to take; even children will not demur. Another point in favor of onion syrup (with those who object to the onion because of its smell) is that it will not in the least taint the breath.

Onions should not be fried. In that way they are hard to digest. Baked with a bit of beef or mutton, cooked or stewed with milk, they are excellent. As a vegetable dish, it is best to prepare them as follows: Peel, and boil with enough cold water to cover them about one-fourth their depth. Salt well, to retain the onion flavor. Cover closely, and boil until tender. Drain off all the salt water, put in a bake pan, add butter and milk, and bake 15 minutes.

Suffering Women.

Alas! women do suffer. Why, we often cannot tell, but we know there is one great cause, and that is weakness. The headaches, the depressed feelings, the pains, the discouragements, indeed, almost all the misery has a common cause—weakness. At such times a woman always needs a friend that can be relied upon, and such a friend, for more than twenty years, has been that greatest of all remedies,

WARNER'S SAFE CURE

By its purity and its power it furnishes a prompt relief for women in their hours of need, and if the grateful expressions which come up from the homes of the land about what SAFE CURE has done were printed, they would fill volumes. If you, reader, are a sufferer, can you not take hope from this suggestion?

A SINGLE STANDARD

only is possible, whether as a test of excellence in journalism, or for the measurement of quantities, time or values; and after a career of nearly twenty years of uninterrupted growth is justified in claiming that the standard first established by its founders is the one true test of A Perfect Newspaper.

To publish all the news promptly and succinctly and in the most readable form, without elision or partisan bias; to discuss its significance with frankness, to keep an open eye for public abuses, to give besides a complete record of current thought, fancies and discoveries in all departments of human activity in its daily editions of from 10 to 14 pages, and to provide the whole for its patrons at the nominal price of one cent—that was from the outset and will continue to be the aim of "THE RECORD."

THE PIONEER one cent morning newspaper in the United States, "The Record" still leads where others follow.

Witness its unrivaled average daily circulation exceeding 160,000 copies, and an average exceeding 120,000 copies for its Sunday editions, while imitations of its plan of publication in every important city of the country testify to the truth of the assertion that in the quantity and quality of its contents, and in the price at which it is sold "The Record" has established the standard by which excellence in journalism must be measured.

The daily edition of "The Record" will be sent by mail to any address for $3.00 per year or 25 cents per month.

The daily and Sunday editions together, which will give its readers the best and freshest information of all that is going on in the world every day in the year including holidays, will be sent for $4.00 a year or 35 cents per month.

A System of Rotation.

A writer says in the Country Gentleman: A close observation of the various systems of farming practiced throughout the country, leads to the conclusion that a majority of farmers do not realize the necessity or the advantages of a well planned system of rotation.

They are governed too much by the prospective money value of crops to be grown. Leaving out of count to a great extent the condition of the land, as to loss or added fertility, or the destructive influences of insects that often follow too continuous cropping, the growths that nature produces to hide the nakedness of soils constantly teach us that rotation is necessary. The destruction of crops by insects that feed upon them that have accumulated by a continuation of the same crops teaches us that rotation is a necessity. The decreasing volume of crops grown in succession teaches us also that the system is ruinous. Taking the other side of the question, we soon learn that by a system of rotation carried on in regular order, land can be kept up and made to improve. Three years to corn followed by one or two years to small grain crops and then three years to grass will not give as good returns as a closer rotation, say one year to corn, one to small grain, and one to grass or clover. By the former plan, now too often practiced, the first crop of corn under normal conditions is the best, and the same is true of the other crops, and the last crop is the poorest. The decreased value of a certain crop forces the farmer to change to some other.

Why would it not be better for the farmer to follow the hint given in the successful growth of the first crop after a change? And work in that direction all the time, making a narrow rotation a source of profit, rather than to be forced into a long rotation by the unprofitable yield of crops?

It is possible to improve a worn-out meadow or pasture by a coat of manure and reseeding, but with the wise farmer this course is only followed as a makeshift or the necessity of circumstances and surroundings. For it is an accepted fact that a better sward can be secured by plowing the land, thereby destroying many weeds as well as being able to get a better seed-bed. In the growth of clover the second year after sowing, we expect the maximum crop, and experience teaches that we cannot keep succeeding crops up to this standard by reseeding, but to be able to grow a maximum crop again some other cultivated crop must occupy the land for a season. The growing of a single crop in succession exhausts the properties of the soil necessary for the production of that crop.

BY A BACHELOR.

It is a good deal pleasanter to eat a ripe cucumber than to kiss a baby.

A girl never begins to be attractive till she gets over trying to be fascinating.

A man would know everything about a woman if he only knew when there was nothing else to know.

Having the toothache and a cold in the head at the same time must be almost as bad as falling in love.

After his baby has once cried to come to him, a man will believe any yarn his wife tells about what it has done.

When a man knows that a girl will accept him the first time he proposes to her, it takes half the pleasure out of it.

When a woman is sorry about a thing, she wishes she hadn't done it; when a man is sorry, he wishes he hadn't been found out.

There probably never was a spiritual poet who didn't have times when he wanted a beefsteak smothered in onions and a big piece of cheese.

A woman's first instinct, when the house has been broken into by burglars, is to try to convince her husband that the robbers took some of her canned fruit.

The man who hasn't thought what he will say when he gets engaged is about as rare as the girl who hasn't thought what she will say if he says it.

HOW IT HAPPENED.

Western Judge—"You are charged, sir, with being the leader of a party which hunted down and lynched a horse thief. The days have gone by when citizens of this great Commonwealth can thus take the law into their own hands, hence your arrest. What have you to say?"

Prominent Citizen—"I ain't guilty, jedge. I'll tell you how it was. We caught the feller and tied his hands and feet. Nothin' wrong about that, was there, jedge?"

"No; that was no doubt necessary."

"Wal, jedge, there was a storm comin' up and we couldn't spare him an umbrella very well, so we stood him under a tree. That was all right, wasn't it?"

"Certainly."

"Wal, the clouds kept gatherin' an' the wind was purty high, and we didn't want him blown away, so we tied a rope around his neck and fastened the other end to the limb above—not tight, jedge; just so as to hold him—and we left him standin' solid on his feet. Nothin' wrong about that, was there?"

"Nothing at all."

"Then I kin be excused, can't I?"

"But the man was found suspended from that tree, and stone dead the next morning."

"None of us had anything to do with that, judge. You see we left him standin' there in good health and spirits, for we give all he could drink when we said 'good-bye;' but, you see, during the night the rain came up an' I s'pose the rope got purty wet and shrunk a couple o' feet. That's how the sad accident happened, jedge."—N. Y. Weekly.

"Oh, Mr. Squildig!" exclaimed Mrs. Homewood to a late arrival at her reception, "are you here at last? I have been dying to introduce you to Miss Gimp, of Chicago. She paints beautifully!"

"Paints, does she, Mrs. Homewood?"

"Yes."

"Face or canvas?"—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

"You admit you are an imposter?" said the judge.

"No, I don't, your honor."

"You claimed to be blind, and yet you have an unimpaired eyesight."

"That's true, your honor; but I'm morally blind, sir, and not being able to see any harm in my innocent deception—"

"Six months," ejaculated the judge.—Harper's Bazar.

How yo' joy drives out de doubt,

Seems to settle on de spot,

Teaching Monkeys to Read.

Not a little surprise was occasioned some ten or twelve years ago, when Sir John Lubbock, the distinguished British naturalist, announced that a favorite dog of his had been sufficiently initiated into the mysteries of the English alphabet as to permit him to properly spell short monosyllabic words, and to interpret these in a manner so as to convey his canine thoughts to his master. In brief, by means of cards of a single letter each, Zip, by bringing them together in their proper sequence, would spell out the desired words of his mind—such as "meat," "out," "go," etc.—and, placing these at the feet of Mr. Lubbock, awaited the reply that they were expected to bring forth, and which was invariably assured. There can hardly be a question that the mental operation which determined the spelling and interpretation of the words was identical in kind with that which is made the basis of our own early comprehension—that which is associated with the learning from letter blocks by children—and whether it was more in the nature of a memory feat than anything else barely affects the question. A few minutes later equal surprise was manifested at the exploits of a certain baboon in South Africa, which, on the death of its master—a flagman on the Natal Colony railway—performed his services with such regularity and precision as to warrant the retention of the ape in the employ of the railway company until the time of his death. It is unfortunate that no detailed scientific examination of this remarkable simian was made possible, but general facts surrounding its career are a part of zoological history.

We are as yet hardly in a position to judge of the mental capacity of the ape, but there is scarcely a doubt that it is of a much higher order than is commonly assumed. Stanley, quoting from the note book of the late Emin Pasha, asserts that some of the anthropoids of East Central Africa are acquainted with the use of fire, and that in small droves, under the guidance of torchlights, they would conduct their foraging expeditions. If this be true—and there seems little reason to distrust the statements of so accurate an observer as was Emin Pasha—then it is an indication of a decidedly advanced position held by the animal in relation to the arts. The recent efforts of Mr. Garner, of New York, to interpret monkey speech by "locking" himself up with the large anthropoid apes in the forests of equatorial Africa, and to deduce from this speech the limits of simian observation and reasoning, have had no results, except those of failure. Much more can be expected from the school or schools which have latterly been established by the British Government in India for the instruction in reading, writing and manners of apes and of accurately determining their capabilities. One such, in the presidency of Bombay, with six qualified instructors, has recently sent in a report of progress, and from this it would appear that the chances are at least good to make reputable and "cultured"—beings, shall we call them?—out of a simian stock. The full results of what promises to be a most important inquiry will be awaited with much interest.—Washington Star.

Appropriately Christened.

"I reckons," said the old colored man, "dat I better change de name o' dat mule."

"It doesn't make much difference about what you call a mule, does it?"

"No. But I likes to hab it somethin' 'propriate. Did you ebber hayah tell 'bout sukcumstances ober which you had no control?"

"Yes."

"Well, dat's what I'se gwinter call 'im; 'Sukcumstances!'"—Washington Star.

A GEM.

Vick's Floral Guide for 1897 is just out. To call it a gem is to employ the use of a very mild expression. It is one of the most attractive publications ever issued by James Vick's Sons, Rochester, N. Y., and to those who have had dealings with this old, reliable establishment in past years, this means that the Floral Guide is one of the finest catalogues of the season. Aside from the brilliant ornamental features, it is a compendium of valuable information on the subject of flowers, and should be widely distributed throughout this country. Vick's Floral guide and packet of either Branching Aster, Pansy or New Japan Morning Glory mailed on receipt of 15 cents.

Since 1880 they have received a grand total of 1,048 235 members.
